interim summary

- ▶ uniqueness is established with respect to a contextually-supplied situation.
- ▶ two sub-types of uniqueness situations: larger vs. immediate
  - ▶ not distinctly encoded in English, but distinctly encoded in Mandarin.

- ▶ prior mention required

uniqueness definiteness

- ▶ mutually understood uniqueness situation required
- ▶ no prior mention needed

anaphoric definiteness

- ▶ a distinct type from uniqueness definiteness
  - ▶ no mutually understood situation needed
  - ▶ prior mention required

anaphoric definiteness

- ▶ referring back to a previously mentioned referent
- ▶ indefinites: introduce new referents to the discourse

‘We petted the dog by exactly one stroke.’

post-verbal bare nominals

are less free to be anaphoric definites...

the verb expresses unbounded, non-atomic events as opposed to bounded, single-atomic events

(Zhuang 2019, Zhuang & Aparicio)

mō-le

post-verbal bare nominals

are not always free to be anaphoric definites...

because they are dependent on the VP for interpretation.

(seriously, though, see: Van Geenhoven 1998, Farkas & de Swart 2003, Chung & Ladusaw 2007, Dayal 2011, 2015, Luo 2022)
